

John Lewis January 24, 2020

← Previous Next →

Arandel: InBach review – Bach through 100 electronic kaleidoscopes

(InFiné Records)Techno artist uses period instruments to reshape Bach's mutating melodies into minimalism, ballads and synth-pop

Tweet Like 0 Share

Bach disorientated ... Arandel. Photograph: Julien Mignot

More than the work of any other composer, Johann Sebastian Bach's music seems to be genre-neutral. Over the past three centuries these pure, uninflected melodies and mutating harmonies have been endlessly interpreted by jazz, bossa nova, samba, synth-pop, flamenco, electronica, ambient, rave and drum'n'bass musicians – sometimes, as on Uri Caine's 2000 interpretation of the Goldberg Variations, all on the same album.

Arandel: InBach album art work Photograph: Publicity Image

The latest set of interpretations comes from French artist Arandel, a rather mysterious figure on the fringes of the techno scene who preserves his anonymity at festivals by DJing in a sealed booth. Like Matthew Herbert, he has a Dogme-style manifesto for making music, never using samplers, sequencers or pre-programmed synthetic sounds. InBach started as a collaboration with the Musée De La Musique, a rather wonderful treasure trove of antique instruments on the outskirts of Paris, which gave Arandel access to the likes of a vintage viola da gamba, an Erard square piano, a clavichord and a 1940s ondioline proto-synth, once played by Jean-Jacques Perrey – all of which are put through a 21st-century electronic filter.

Aux Vaisseaux turns the repeated harmonies from the 14 Canons on the Goldberg Ground into a hypnotic piece of minimalism. Crab Canon plays the endlessly cycling counterpoint of the 2 Cancrizans canon on a vintage celeste, then plays the tune backwards and reverses the tape, to wonderfully disorientating effect. Passacaglia and Hysope both turn organ works into throbbing pieces of synth-pop, like Wendy Carlos joining the Pet Shop Boys, accompanied by a choir of angels.

Arandel is also helped by numerous guests. A version of the C Minor Prelude features Petra Haden leaping through the rangy melody – like a one-woman Swingle Singers – over a bleepy synth backing; while French chansonnier Barbara Carlotti transforms a Bach choral prelude into a Serge Gainsbourg-style ballad called Blulette. There are some moments of banality, but Arandel's Bach pastiches are quite good – his Homage to JS Bach sounds like the first Prelude in C Major refracted through a hundred kaleidoscopes.

Arandel: InBach is released on 7 February.

Also out this month

Waclaw Zimpel is a Polish multi-instrumentalist whose excellent new album Massive Oscillations (31 January, Ongehoord Records), mixed by like-minded minimalist James Holden, features slow-burning, ever-mutating drones and clarinet freakouts, accompanied by drums that shift from the hypnotic to the thunderous.

Joachim Kühn & Mateusz Smoczyński – Speaking Sound (25 January, ACT Records) sees the German pianist and the Polish violinist engage in nine duets that lurch from mournful ballads and spiky abstractions to Bartók-like mutations of eastern European folk themes.

Worlds Within is the self-released debut solo album by Canadian cellist Raphael Weinroth-Browne. Using looper pedals, drones and special effects, he creates 10 atmospheric soundscapes – all in the same key – that occasionally move into odd time signatures or edge towards ambient house.

- Sigala review – one-man party-starter defies Storm Ciara with tropical show
- Bob Marley at 75: how a ghetto reggae star rebranded Jamaica
- Grace Jones' Meltdown: Solange, Skunk Anansie and Lee Fields to play
- Les Vêpres Siciliennes review – theatricality and spectacle in Verdi's grand opera
- 'Like Halle Berry versus gum disease': nine things we learned at the 2020 Oscars
- Calls to save Radio New Zealand classical music station reach crescendo
- 'Time to shine': Janelle Monáe celebrates diversity in Oscars opening number
- Laneway festival review – the 1975, Charli XCX offer something to hope for
- Drive-By Truckers: 'We have redneck in us. No one tells us what to do'
- Julian Cope review – chaotic cult hero doesn't compromise
- Shopping: All Or Nothing review – more frenetic and kinetic than ever
- Green Day: Father of All Motherfuckers review – apolitical angst with aplomb
- Psappha review – Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire is truly groundbreaking
- On my radar: David Lan's cultural highlights
- Lil Wayne: Funeral review – fearsome and full of life
- Home listening: step up, Franz Clement and Henry Litloff
- Eurovision 2020: Montaigne to represent country after winning Australia Decides
- Karen Sharp Trio: Another Place review – three is the magic number
- Madonna in full meltdown: a moment to be cherished
- Take one: lost Dave Brubeck tapes reveal jazz hit originally sounded like 'a bad student band'
- Marc Almond: 'I've been through all the vices and now don't have any'
- Anna Meredith review – a careering getaway ride from musical convention
- One to watch: Pongo
- The week in classical: Alice's Adventures Under Ground; Beethoven Weekender – review
- Buggul review: live tribute to Gurrumul's last gift to the world has fitting end for Yolgnu legend
- Judge rules Kesha defamed Dr Luke by claiming he raped Katy Perry
- Ryan Beatty was set to be the next Bieber – then he realised he was living a lie
- Teranga – the migrant-run Afrobeat nightclub uniting Naples – video
- Liam Gallagher's son and Ringo Starr's grandson in court over Tesco affray charge
- Tracks of the week reviewed: Låpsley, Gorillaz, Elon Musk