Following her remarkable first album "Crave", Léonie Pernet returns with a brand-new EP at the end of 2019 "The Craving Tape".

Composed of 5 tracks, 3 of which are original tracks, Léonie Pernet brings us here a message, as a balance sheet, about the world around us. She suggests that we pause for a moment to listen; that we should learn to stop a bit in a world where the logic of instantaneity is becoming more and more present. No matter if it is by lending her voice to sing her observations to us in "Les pères pleurent en écho", or by letting the sounds of the instruments express his concerns in "Ce qu'il reste de nous", the message remains the same:

"In a world where it is difficult to hear oneself think and feel, where social networks and continuous news channels scream louder every day than the day before, I needed to press pause and go get my inner orchestra.

I heard strings, piano, voices, some percussion and a small battery-powered synthesizer. Instruments that will not go out when everything goes out. »
